If the leaders of Washington, Oregon and Idaho have decided that hydropower is green at the expense of salmon recovery, but with regrets, how can they allow even more habitat loss, wildfire risk and noise pollution to ensue from the unwise routing of this abomination. Follow existing right of ways, preferably underground, or let people who want this power feed and power themselves. The few remaining healthy and clean places on this planet need to be saved for their own sake for the health of the biosphere.

“A thing is right when it tends to preserve the integrity, stability, and beauty of the biotic community. It is wrong when it tends otherwise.” Aldo Leopold
