Hackers target home wireless networks

A home wireless network allows you to access the Internet from anywhere in the house, yet you may not be the only person viewing your online records. If your network is unsecured, you're running the risk of hackers stealing your personal information or damaging your computer.

In a practice known as wardriving, people search for Wi-Fi wireless networks while in a moving vehicle. They can use a global positioning system (GPS) and laptop to detect networks, and access your wireless network traffic. This may include private e-mails, financial information, credit card numbers, and passwords.

Here are some tips to reduce the chance you'll become a victim of wardriving:

- Avoid using something obvious like your name or address when naming your network
- Activate Wireless Encryption Protocol on your router so you block access
- Disable the broadcast so you won't see the access point if you scan with your network card

By taking these simple steps, you can keep your personal information safe and enjoy the benefits of your wireless home network.
