information made public has been confusing or incorrect, and the White House has at times bypassed independent journalists and posted videos of closed events online.

Norm Eisen, Obama's special counsel for ethics and government reform, has likened the challenge of opening up massive federal agencies resistant to change to turning around a battleship. After the first year, Eisen wrote in a recent White House blog post, "we are starting to see real progress on the openness and transparency front."

Outsiders agree. "What the administration has done is gone from nothing to creating a full-blown discussion about the need for greater government accountability and transparency," said Ellen Miller, co-founder of the Sunlight Foundation, one of the leading non-partisan advocates for more government openness.

Veteran activist Fred Wertheimer's Democracy 21 was among a coalition of watchdog groups that gave Obama an 'A' for his first year transparency efforts.

"We thought they were making substantial efforts far beyond what others had done in the past," Wertheimer said, emphasizing that he's still waiting to see how the efforts evolve.

Among the major initiatives, Obama's White House:

- For the first time, began posting online the names of visitors to the White House. Some have found the records hard to decipher or complained about the lag in release time, 90 to 120 days, while House officials think they have balanced the public's right to know with issues such as national security.

- Set up the first online application for reporters and the first online application for House employees' public financial disclosure reports, and published an online report of White House salaries.

- Started data.gov and recovery.gov Web sites to post government data and stimulus spending, respectively. Users can look at government contracts or track where the early spending in the roughly $500 billion stimulus bill was going. Initially, the raw stimulus spending data contained mistakes.

Obama's deputy chief technology officer, former Google public policy director Andrew McLaughlin, espouses the Web 2.0 philosophy that it's better to get information out there and fix it later if it's wrong.

"Of course there are going to be screw-ups, and, of course, some of the data is going to be inaccurate," McLaughlin said. "But part of the beauty of making it all publicly available is people will tell you if you have bad data, and you can fix it. The challenge is to prove we can rigorously follow up."

The Sunlight Foundation's Miller agrees that access to information is more important than perfect data. "The fact that these two (Web sites) exist is a remarkable transformation in the way the government has held its data for decades," she said.

- Ordered federal departments to streamline and expedite Freedom of Information Act responses, and to "adopt a presumption in favor of disclosure." The response has been mixed. Eisen tests one-year metrics showing better disclosure and better responses to FOIA requests, but others say that changing an ethic leaning toward secrecy in many federal agencies will take time.

Congress also has been less enthusiastic about the transparency push. Although watchdog groups say it has improved in disclosure of earmarks, lobbying contacts and office expenditures, the Senate still has not required candidates to file campaign finance reports online, which delays the examination of donations in the middle of a campaign.

WESD Audit

Meanwhile, the district is holding back the part of the report that lists findings and recommendations and examines compliance with state and federal grants and contracts.

Novotney said the accountants still have not signed off on the section.

It details "material weaknesses" found in the district's financial procedures, according to the main audit. Material weaknesses are the most severe deficiencies and they indicate a risk that intentional or unintentional misstatement of financial information would not be detected.

Oregon school and education service districts are required to file financial reports with the state Department of Education by Dec. 31 of each year. The Secretary of State's office requires that independent auditors review the reports and express an opinion on their accuracy.

Willamette received a two-month extension from the state so its auditors would have more time to locate missing documents.

Auditor's reports are issued with an "unqualified opinion," which is basically a clean bill of health; a "qualified opinion," meaning one or two things don't comply with generally accepted accounting principals; or an "adverse opinion," when the auditor determines that the material is materially misstated.

Willamette received the relatively rare "disclaimer of opinion," meaning the auditor could not complete the work.

"This is an unusual situation," said Gary Blackmer, director of the state Audits Division.

Neither the Secretary of State's office nor the Oregon Department of Education will penalize WESD.

ODE withheld $3.5 million in funding until receiving the report last week, spokesman Morgan Allen said. It will release the money this week.

ODE accountants also will examine figures in the report that relate to state funding, such as property tax receipts, to ensure their accuracy, he said.

Among the problems cited by the auditor was the fact that Novotney refused to sign a statement accepting responsibility for the financial statements and certifying that information provided to the auditors was accurate.

Such a letter is a required part of the audit. Its absence alone would make it impossible for an independent auditor to give unqualified approval to the statements.

"I wasn't the superintendent during the audit period and I'm unable to sign the written representations verifying that the previous balances and financial statements were correct," Novotney said.

Boldt, Carlisle & Smith of Salem had been the district's auditor for the previous four years.

In three of those four years it issued "qualified" opinions, meaning parts of the financial statements could not be verified, said Doug Parham, who oversees municipal audits for the company.

The reports noted inadequate documentation in several areas. They also noted significant deficiencies in internal financial controls.

Board Chairman Jack Stoops did not respond to a request for comment. Board members previously have said they did not read the audit reports.

Willamette — the state's second-largest education service district — has been in turmoil since last summer when an investigation into whistleblower claims found financial and management improprieties. A state audit released in January detailed widespread mismanagement.

The district's board fired Superintendent Maureen Casey in October.

Actor Peter Graves dies at 83

'Mission Impossible' TV star began his career in films

By BOB THOMAS
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Peter Graves, the tall, staid actor likely best known for his portrayal of Jim Phelps, leader of a gang of special agents who battled evil conspirators in the long-running television series "Mission: Impossible," died Sunday.

Graves died of an apparent heart attack outside his Los Angeles home, publisher Sandy Brokaw said. He would have been 84 this week.

Graves had just returned from brunch with his wife and kids and collapsed before he made it into the house, Brokaw said. One of his daughters administered CPR but was unable to revive him. Graves' family doctor visited the house and thought he had a heart attack, Brokaw said.

Although Graves never achieved the stardom of his older brother, James Arness, enjoyed as Marshal Matt Dillon on TV's "Gunsmoke," he had a number of memorable roles in both films and television.

Normally cast as a hero, he turned in an unforgettable performance early in his career as the treacherous Nazi spy in Billy Wilder's 1953 prisoner-of-war drama "Staling 17."

He also masterfully impersonated his similarly named brother, in which he portrayed bumbling airline pilot Clarence Oweat in the 1980 disaster movie spoof "Airplane!"

Graves appeared in dozens of films and a handful of television shows in a career of nearly 60 years.

The authority and trust he projected made him a favorite for commercials late in his life, and he often was encouraged to go into politics.

"He had this statesman-like quality," Brokaw said. "People were always encouraging him to run for office. But he said, 'I like acting.'"

Pacific Power files for Oregon rate change

On March 1, 2010, Pacific Power filed a general rate case with the Oregon Public Utility Commission, requesting recovery of capital investments and other operating costs. If approved, the request would result in an overall increase to rates of $130.9 million, or 13.1 percent. The percentage increase to residential, commercial, irrigation and industrial customers would be approximately 13.3 percent; no impact is proposed for street lighting customers.

The primary purpose and need of the filing is to recover costs for ongoing new investments to meet renewable and cleaner energy mandates through wind farms and transmission to deliver it to the electrical system that provides safe, reliable electricity for our customers. If approved by the commission, the average residential customer using 900 kilowatt-hours per month will see an increase of approximately $11.01 per month and the increase would take effect January 1, 2011. Even with this rate increase, Pacific Power's prices will remain competitive when measured against other utilities in the state. Pacific Power serves about 553,000 customers in Oregon.

We understand the impact that price increases have on our customers and work to mitigate the impacts as much as possible. Customers can visit pacificpower.net/watersmart for energy and money-saving tips and information. Energy Trust of Oregon also offers energy efficiency programs and information to Oregon residents and businesses. Contact Energy Trust of Oregon at energytrust.org or 1-866-366-7878 for more information.

Copies of the company's rate request application, testimony and exhibits are available at each of the company's district offices and at Pacific Power's main office, located at 825 NE Multnomah St., Portland, Oregon 97232, and on our Web site at pacificpower.net/rates. Customers may contact Pacific Power for additional information about the filing by mail to Pacific Power's main office at the address above, or by calling 503-813-5000 or toll free at 1-888-221-7070. TDD/TTY users can call the National Relay Service at 1-888-221-7070. Para una representación que habla español, llame al 1-888-225-2611. Requests to receive notice of the time and place of any hearing on this application may be directed to the Oregon Public Utility Commission at 550 Capitol Street NE, Salem, Oregon 97301 or by calling 1-800-522-2404.

The purpose of this announcement is to provide our customers with general information regarding the company's price increase application and the expected effect on customers. Calculations and statements contained in this notice are not binding on the Oregon Public Utility Commission.

Keeping you informed Pacific Power files for Oregon rate change

On March 1, 2010, Pacific Power filed a general rate case with the Oregon Public Utility Commission, requesting recovery of capital investments and other operating costs. If approved, the request would result in an overall increase to rates of $130.9 million, or 13.1 percent. The percentage increase to residential, commercial, irrigation and industrial customers would be approximately 13.3 percent; no impact is proposed for street lighting customers.

The primary purpose and need of the filing is to recover costs for ongoing new investments to meet renewable and cleaner energy mandates through wind farms and transmission to deliver it to the electrical system that provides safe, reliable electricity for our customers. If approved by the commission, the average residential customer using 900 kilowatt-hours per month will see an increase of approximately $11.01 per month and the increase would take effect January 1, 2011. Even with this rate increase, Pacific Power's prices will remain competitive when measured against other utilities in the state. Pacific Power serves about 553,000 customers in Oregon.

We understand the impact that price increases have on our customers and work to mitigate the impacts as much as possible. Customers can visit pacificpower.net/wattsmart for energy and money-saving tips and information. Energy Trust of Oregon also offers energy efficiency programs and information to Oregon residents and businesses. Keeping you informed

On March 1, 2010, Pacific Power filed a general rate case with the Oregon Public Utility Commission, requesting recovery of capital investments and other operating costs. If approved, the request would result in an overall increase to rates of $130.9 million, or 13.1 percent. The percentage increase to residential, commercial, irrigation and industrial customers would be approximately 13.3 percent; no impact is proposed for street lighting customers.

The primary purpose and need of the filing is to recover costs for ongoing new investments to meet renewable and cleaner energy mandates through wind farms and transmission to deliver it to the electrical system that provides safe, reliable electricity for our customers. If approved by the commission, the average residential customer using 900 kilowatt-hours per month will see an increase of approximately $11.01 per month and the increase would take effect January 1, 2011. Even with this rate increase, Pacific Power's prices will remain competitive when measured against other utilities in the state. Pacific Power serves about 553,000 customers in Oregon.

We understand the impact that price increases have on our customers and work to mitigate the impacts as much as possible. Customers can visit pacificpower.net/wattsmart for energy and money-saving tips and information. Energy Trust of Oregon also offers energy efficiency programs and information to Oregon residents and businesses. Contact Energy Trust of Oregon at energytrust.org or 1-866-368-7878 for more information.

Copies of the company's rate request application, testimony and exhibits are available at each of the company's district offices and at Pacific Power's main office, located at 825 NE Multnomah St., Portland, Oregon 97232, and on our Web site at pacificpower.net/rates. Customers may contact Pacific Power for additional information about the filing by mail to Pacific Power's main office at the address above, or by calling 503-813-5000 or toll free at 1-888-221-7070. TDD/TTY users can call the National Relay Service or 1-888-221-7070. Para un representante que habla español, llame al 1-888-225-2611. Requests to receive notice of the time and place of any hearing on this application may be directed to the Oregon Public Utility Commission at 550 Capitol Street NE, Salem, Oregon 97301 or by calling 1-800-522-2404.

The purpose of this announcement is to provide our customers with general information regarding the company's price increase application and the expected effect on customers. Calculations and statements contained in this notice are not binding on the Oregon Public Utility Commission.
