About Synapse Energy Economics

Synapse Energy Economics, Inc. (Synapse) provides research, testimony, reports, and regulatory support to environmental organizations, regulatory commissions, consumer advocates, state energy offices, and others. The firm was founded in 1996 to specialize in consulting on energy, economic, and environmental topics. We have a professional staff of 26 engineers, scientists, policy experts, and economists with extensive experience in technical, economic, and environmental issues in the electricity and natural gas industries.

Synapse assesses the implications of electricity and natural gas industry planning, regulation, and restructuring. Our work covers various interrelated issues such as energy efficiency, integrated resource planning, service reliability, siting, fuel diversity, transmission planning, financial and economic risks, renewable energy potential and renewable portfolio standards, electricity modeling, portfolio management, customer service, and more.

Synapse works for a wide range of clients operating on the local, state, regional, and national levels throughout the United States, including attorneys general, offices of consumer advocates, public utility commissions, a variety of environmental groups, foundations, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Department of Energy, Department of Justice, Federal Trade Commission, the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, and others.
